

I stand behind this:

"The 'physical component', when present at all (it is often missing) is like a banana peel. You strip it off and throw it away, and the goodness is inside. That's why there's no 'concern' about 'shells' left lying about.... if it was valuable, it wouldn't have been discarded."

It should be kept in mind, that that no 1 million IQ, benevolent entity would litter hundreds of dangerous troves of advanced technology for 70 years, so that mentally disturbed, world-destroying great apes can reverse-engineer them, then come to despoil, rape and pillage the galaxy.

I also stand behind this:

It was maybe twenty years ago, when I first started having some interaction with the 'Fae civilization' and the topic of 'UFOs' came up. The Fae in question immediately fell down onto the 'ground' and started laughing uncontrollably. This went on for a while. Finally, he said the reason for the laughter ---- "there is no outer space".

It took me about FOREVER before that made sense to me!

It's rather like Christianity you know.

If there is no 'sin' (there isn't), then there is no need for someone to suddenly pop up out of nowhere in late history, offering to 'save you from your sins', and torture and kill your enemies either, for that matter.

If there is no 'space', then there is no need for 'spaceships'.

Now am I denying space? Am I some weird person, worse than a flat-earther?

Not at all.

For a Faerie, a resident of what's typically called 'The Astral Realm', it does indeed LOOK LIKE OUTER SPACE where they live (there's TONS of 'stars' --- but as any NDE'er knows --- THEY AREN'T STARS.

From the Faerie perspective this makes perfect sense, and as:

1) Sometimes Faeries and Faerie pranks are confused with 'UFOs'

2) Faeries consider that the 'physical world' is just a crust, an epiphenomenon of the 'Astral Realm', then of course they don't consider that there is 'space'.

Now should we believe in 'space'?

Well, buy me a beer sometime and I'll explain that to you. Remember, Jacques Vallee said, "This is all a theatrical production." And He is correct.

Kevin Cann
Public Domain
1/28/2025