

The Core Human Challenge

The reason that I harp on Christianity so hard, and religion in general, and that includes the religion of scientism, is that if you clutch onto certain narrow concepts to 'save you' (help you get through the night --- it's a very rough world to live in), then you never even meet the 'real you' that is the unconscious part of you, the '95%'.

The 'world controls us' through these control mechanisms that flood the 5% of our conscious rational self, and we never meet our real selves at all.

This is the first thing that a 'mystic' learns about the world, and then the big problem is what to do about that?

The problem is that the 'alternate religions and spiritualities' are power-grabbing, life-dominating MEME structures too.

It's nearly IMPOSSIBLE to find true freedom.

It's easily doable, but you'd have to really want it bad,

to 'thread that eye of the needle.

I truly feel that if humans don't find that narrow narrow path,

that they are just plain fucked.

UFOs are like a wakeup call in part... so are other things...

but will we wake up? As a species I mean?

it's looking a little grim.
