

Divine Madness

I made myself smile this morning, LOL.

I think that those of you that I'm not in email contact with may be the lucky ones. This email snippet may explain!

"I've had to adapt to the fact that I'm a firehose and people are a thimble, and they have busy lives, and this is my only task."

Whatever you want to call it, whether that's a muse, or a daimon, or the goddess kundalini shakti, or the larger life, once it gets hold of you, it's very typical to get 'hypergraphia'.

I watched it happen with my inner eye when it first hit, the first thing the phenomenon does is to make a beeline from the dream substance storage girdle to Broca's area in the left hemisphere.

"Broca's area is located in the inferior frontal gyrus of the left hemisphere. For the vast majority of people, regardless of handedness, the left hemisphere is the dominant hemisphere for language"

Phillip K. Dick experienced the worst case of this ever known!
He makes me look like a little pussy cat in comparison.

Historically others called it divine madness, even Plato did apparently, though it needn't be 'mad' or 'maddening', at least if you understand the principles of PS.
